VERY BLACK EYE

AND OTHER WESTERN LINES HIT BY BOSTON ROADS.

That Will End the Effort to Extend Indefinitely the Time Limits of Endeavorers' Tickets.

The Boston terminal lines have taken a hand in the fight over the arrangements for the Christian Endeavor convention and the result is such as to give the Soo line and all others who have been promising longtime return limits on all their tickets a very black eye. The Boston lines#decided in a special meeting that the time limits for Christian Endeavor and Christian Union tickets will be strictly enforced regardless of a printed or promised condition made by connecting lines to the contrary. Round-trip tickets for these conventions will only be accepted by the terminal lines for the going passage from July 6 to 12, inclusive, and the return portion will be accepted only from July 11 to 31, inclusive. Tickets presented to the terminal lines contrary to these dates will not be accepted. There is no way that the Soo line, now that the others have been promising return limits on Christian Endeavor tickets as late as Sept. 1 and 15, can get around this thing if the terminal lines adhere to their resolutions, and there is no doubt that they will do so. All they can do is to make the tickets good for the return over their own lines and protect the passenger for the amount of the fare over the terminal lines. Few of them will go to

Before it passed into company owning it. Before it passed into the hands of the Pennsylvania Company he was a subgeneral manager, looking after every part of the securing of right of way and construction work. When the Pennsylvania purchased the road it also took control of the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis. He was appointed real-estate agent, and still his name appears on the pay roll as such. A few years ago he became unable, on account of age, to perform the duties of the office, and he was partiafly relieved, his name being carried on the roll at half pay. He was a very valuable and faithful man to the company, and many and faithful man to the company, and many of the relics of early rallroading which Mr. Elvin furnished are now in the hands of the Pennsylvania Company. .

Control of the Queen & Crescent. The latest information is that through the ourchase of the securities of the Cincinnati New Orleans & Texas Pacific railroad-Queen & Crescent route-which were given as collateral for the Cincinnati extension bonds, the road has passed under the con-trol of the Southern Railway Company and the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton, which will operate the road jointly, but not in ction with their own lines. The securities, which were sold by order of Special Master Childress, to President Samncer, of the Southern railway, consisted of 9,091 series A I shares of the Queen & Crescent railroad, 68,000 series A shares of the Alabama Great Southern railroad and 78,041 ordinary shares of the Alabama Great Southern railroad.

A Great Day with the Big Four. On the Fourth of July there were handled on the Big Four proper the largest number of passengers in the history of the company by divisions, as follows: St. Louis division, 9,104; Cincinnati division, 8,021; Chicago division, 7,164; Bee-line division, 6,321; Cincinnati division, 3,362; Michigan division, 5,931; Sandusky division, 3,283; Whitewater division, 893, making a grand total of 44,679. The trains were moved with promptness and not a passenger was injured in any way-a record of which General Superintendent Van Winkle is very proud.
On the Fourth of July the Peoria & Eastern handled 4,705 passengers, which was a good showing for a road of its mileage.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK

ELUCIDATION AND REVIEW OF IN-TERNATIONAL LESSON, JULY 7.

The Commandments Given to Moses-They Will Never Be Repealed and Men Will Not Outgrow Them.

By REV. JAMES E. GILBERT, D. D., Secretary of the American Society of Re-ligious Education.

These lessons constitute the Sunday-school extension department of the above society. All who study them are requested to send their names, postoffice address and denomination, mentioning this paper, to the author at Washington, D. C., for enrollment.)

INTRODUCTION .- Our studies now turn backward fifteen centuries, from Christ to Moses. We must place ourselves at the opening of the Levitical dispensation. The patriarchal system had accomplished its mission. By means of the family, as the chief institution, the father being king and priest, many virtues and truths had been developed and the Messianic hope had been kept alive. But divided civilization required a new order. God determined to make the posterity of Abraham a nation (Gen. xxxv, 11), to plant them in the promised land and train them to be teachers of the race. (Gen. xii, 3.) Led out of Egyptian bondage, over the sea, across the desert, the people encamped at the base of Sinal. There the new covenant (Dieut. iv, 13) was delivered in the form of ten commandments, our lesson for the day. Those commands falls under two heads-the first four covering duty to God; the other

POLYTHEISM .- "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." In the attempt to explain natural phenomena and human history the ancients multiplied deities and introduced various rites to placate them. This habit resulted in innumerable evils, which could not be corrected until the cause was removed. (Rom. i. 28.) in setting apart a people for himself the Almighty therefore began His covenant by claiming the sole and absolute loyalty and service of Israel, enforcing it by the consideration that He had liberated them and gave to this people the high mission of holding and propagating the doctrine of the divine unity until the whole human family should receive it. (Isa. xi, 9.) How unfaithful they were to this monotneistic idea their history shows. (II Kings xvii, 7.) IDOLATRY .- "Thou shalt not make any graven image to worship." It is the ratural tendency of an undeveloped mind to locate the deity and to give Him form, thereby hoping to come into more intimate relations. But this exercises a most degrading and corrupting influence upon the devotee (Rom. 1, 25), as appears in the condition of the whole heathen world. Man becmes like that he worships. God is a spirit, (John IV, 24), uncreated, invisible, immortal, He has neither body nor parts. He is om-niscient and omnipresent, This exalted view of Him is a prime condition of acceptable and profitable approach. One who comes to such a Being is drawn upward out of the material and sensuous into that realm where dominant forces play. To for-bid idols was therefore necessary in training Israel and in training the race toalized in Jesus Christ (Rom, viii, 6), who is the way and the pattern.

PROFANITY.—"Thou shalt not take the name of thy God in vain." Reverence for God is as necessary as a conviction of His unity and spirituality. It is indeed the beginning of wisdom (Psalm exi, 10), and of every virtue. To exalt Him in one's hought promotes humility and trust, and these minister constantly to the higher-elements of character. (Prov. xv. 33.) The very pame applied to the deity—Almighty, Jehovah, God—whatever it may be, edu-cates, because it conveys certain ideas to the mind and produces appropriate emothe name is pronounced is a matter of great importance. It is said that one name of God was held so sacred by the Jews that they never spoke it. In their reading they passed it in silence. To enforce this third command blasphemy was punished with death (Lev. xxiv, 16), and the whole SABBATH.—"Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy." There might be correct notions of God, but little religion. The foregoing negations might prevent bad actions; there is needed something positive to support and promote a holy life. One day in seven was therefore set apart for sacred purposes, from which all labor should be excluded. That it might be used for the cultivation of the higher nature, labor was enjoined on the other six days for the supply of the needs of the lower nature. As an incentive for keeping the Sabbath God based it upon His own act in creation. During six periods of time (so the Hebrew translated day signifies) He had worked in the physical; on the seventh He had retired into the contemplations and movements of the spiritual. (Gen. fi, 1-3.) So man is urged to make his brief life after his divine . pattern. The keeping of the Sabbath was the essential of Israel's progress, and it was guarded afterward in many statutes. (Ex. xxxi, 13-17.) Ine spiritual advancement of any people is conditional upon the right observance of one day unto the Lord. (Isa. lviii, 13-14.)

PARENTS.—"Honor thy father and thy mather." The first table of the Decalogue

mother." The first table of the Decalogue -that which pertained to God-closed with positive command that strengthened all prohibitions. The second table, referring to duty to man, opens with a pre-cept that prepares for all the negations that follow. Parents stand to us on the earthly side in the place of God. They give us being, guidance, protection, instruction and affection. A proper regard for them on the part of the child insures that mental and moral development, that unity and poise of character and disposition which prepares for the various relations in life. (Prov. xxx, 17.) Sabbath keeping is the support of piety; honor to parents the support of morals. This command rested on the experiences of the ancient world, from Adam down, a period of twenty-five centuries. A father's blessing was esteemed the richest legacy (Gen. xxvii, 34) and a wayward and disobedient son a monstrosity and calamity (II Sam. xviii, 33) not worthy to live. (Deut. xxi, 18-21.) MURDER .- "Thou shalt not kill." world before Moses, and to a large extent afterward, was filled with violence. (Gen. vi. 11.) The benign influence of government had not been exerted to determine and defend the rights of men. Each deemed it necessary to avenge himself, often governed by passion. (Judges xvil, 6.) Human life was therefore lightly held. It was the time of alarms and blood, unfavorable to morals and religion, as well as civilization; for civilization is but the fruitage of religion. (Prov. xiv. 34.) It was therefore a long advance toward a better day when the taking of life by the individual was forbidden; when executions for certain offenses were to be made only by constituted authority. This lifted the whole subject of crime out of the realm of personal enmity into that of the public welfare.

ADULTERY .- "Thou shalt not community adultery." The life union of one man with one woman (Gen. II, 22), for the propagation of the race (Gen. i, 28), and for their own development and happiness (Gen. ii, 18), is the most primitve institution among men. Maintained in its original purity it is the source of more blessing to mankind than all other institutions combined. (Prov. xxii, 6.) Whatever invades its sanctity and perverts its purpose is a menace to the public welfare. Nothing will do this more surely than infidelity to the marriage vow. This law against adultery is intended to promote domestic happiness and lay a foundation for virtue in the mutual love of pure hearts. (Prov. xxxi, 11; Eph. v, 25.) It was protected by the death penalty. (Lev. xx, 10.)

STEALING .- "Thou shalt not steal." Life, chastity, property-this was the order of legislation in the Divine mind. A man might be pure but poor-he is entitled to possess worldly goods. This law gives no countenance to the many attempts to reform society-socialism, compunism, paternalism, agrarianism. Divine wisdom has declared in favor of individual ownership, and the duty of every man to respect the property rights of his fellow rests upon the antecedent assumption that the undisturbed eossesion of estates is for the good of all, and hence according to the will of God. (I Tim. vi. 17.) The Scripture prescribes but one mode of accumulating property, namely, by honest toil and wise economy (Pro. vi. 6-8), in the practice of which virtue grows. Stealing hurts the thief and deranges the social order. The abuses of property and the relation between capital and labor were nicely adjusted in the Mosaic code.

(Lev. xxv, 27.) TESTIMONY .- "Thou shalt not bear false witness." The thief and the liar are here closely related. Experience attests the wisdom of classing them together. The first takes another's property, the second another's reputation. Every man needs these two instruments in working out his life plan—his capital and his good name, the product of his industry and of his right living. Whoever robs him of either prevents his highest usefulness and happiness. The liar is probably most despicable, for he takes what does not enrich himself and he leaves his victim poor indeed. The evil tongue has blasted many a life. (Titus life) The elanders is the meanest of robiii, 2.) The slanderer is the meanest of rob-

COVETOUSNESS. - "Thou shalt covet." God metes out to every man that which is best for him. Humility and gratitude accept the portion, and by it seek to fill an appointed destiny (Heb. xili, 5) and to glorify the Maker. Contentment with one's lot does not forbid all honest striving after those better things seen to be possible through present opportunities. But he who looks with desire to another's position and possession will soon distrust the All Father, experience unholy longings and fall into many snares, even to jealousy and envy of his neighbor and evil conduct toward him. (Luke xii, 15.) Thereby the supreme law of love is violated. (Romans xiii, 9.) CONCLUSION. - Such are the ten laws delivered to Moses, the spiritual constitu-tion of the new Israel. (Rom. vil. 14.) Two of them are injunctions prescribing those things that make for righteousness, centering piety in the observance of a day, and morality in the honor due to parents. The other eight are prohibitions, curbing the evil tendency of human nature, protections against irreligion, vice and crime. The exalted character of these laws-their elevation above the time when they were published—proves their divine origin. They have never been repealed—they never will be repealed. (Matt. v. 18.). Men will never outgrow them. They contain eternal and universal principles, which Jesus compressed into one simple statement in two parts. (Matt. xxii, 37-39.)
